Diplomatic sources said Mrs. Kirkpatrick convinced Mr. Hammadi to tone down his original resolution and drop a demand for economic and political sanctions against Israel, Instead, the resolution condemns Israel for the raid and calls for a redress of the damages, they said.

The new French president also said that, as a friend of Israel, he regrets that Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin did not place more confidence in him to respect Israel's security interests. ment's sale to Iraq.
The clause provided that a joint French-Iragi committee would decide on the experimental programs for the two reactines at the nuclear center and that French technicians would take part in the experiments. Those provisions were made public by the French Atomic Energy Commission (CEA) this week.

Mr. Mitterrand indicated that he will demand a thorough study of the real dangers of nuclear proliferation that were involved in the Iraqi center. But be made clear that, as far as he is concerned, he accepts the CEA's stand

He said the death of a French technician in the Israeli raid was itself enough to justify French protests.

France has called at the United Nations for a condemnation of the raid. The French UN representtive also asked that Israel be called upon to pay reparations for the destruction. While Mr. Mitterrand did not refer to that demand, a French Foreign Ministry spokesman recalled that it is not unprecedented. He noted

ASEAN Outlines Cambodia Plan

By Henry Kamm New York Times Service

MANILA - Five non-Communist nations of Southeast Asia concluded a conference Thursday night in which they laid the groundwork for their approach to next month's session at the United Nations on Vietnam's continuing occupation of Cambodia.

The foreign ministers of the Philippines, Thailand, Singapore, Indonesia and Malaysia declared that a political settlement must be pased on three initial steps: the dispatch of a UN peace-keeping force, the withdrawal of the Vietnamese occupation army and the disarming of the warring Cambodian factions once Vietnam has pulled out.

BRUSSELS - The European Economie Community's 14 commissioners are holding a private session this weekend to pull together the threads of a tortuous debate on reforming the EEC budg-

By the end of this month, EEC sources said, they must submit detailed proposals to member governments for what could be one of the most difficult negotiations in the EEC's history.

The EEC Commission was charged in May last year with the task of drawing up a blueprint for reforming the $25-billion budget in order to avoid a repetition of the dispute over payments that split Britain and its EEC partners for more than a year.

In a two-day session at the Belgian seaside resort of Knokke Friday and Saturday it aims to put its ideas down on paper at long last. For the 14 commissioners themselves, the task of reconciling conflicting national interests has become a test of the commission's credibility that could ultimately even cost them their johs.

To solve the problem of excessive farm spending, the commission is expected to argue that farm prices should be reduced to bring them closer to world prices, sources said. Farmers are likely also to be called upon to bear more of the cost of getting rid of surpluses, in the past a heavy burden on EEC financing, with income aids being offered to less well-off farmers in poorer regions. But Britain is likely to get short shrift from the commission if it complains about excessive tax payments caused by its imports of farm produce and other goods from outside the community, the sources said.

Iraq Was Reportedly Stockpiling Uranium WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

New York Times Service PARIS — Iraq was stockpiling large quantities of uranium for at least a year before Israeli aircraft knocked out its French-huilt Osirak reactor on June 7, sources at the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna said Thursday.

These uranium purchases are one of a number of disturbing aspects of Iraq's supposedly peaceful nuclear development program which helped fuel fears in Israel as well as at the IAEA that Baghdad might be planning to huild nuclear weapons sometime in the future, according to these sources.

"If you ask whether Iraq had it in mind to make nuclear weapons one day, then I'd say a lot of people at the agency thought it proba-hly did. A lot of things it was doing only made sense on that assumption," one Western diplomat at the IAEA commented.

Scientists to Stay

In Paris, the new Socialist government revealed the existence of a secret agreement with Iraq that the government claims made it impossible for Baghdad to obtain a militarily significant quantity of nuclear explosive from the Osirak reac-

Under this unpublished agreement, France was to keep atomic scientists working at the Frenchsupplied research project until 1989. The scientists were em-powered to watch all of Iraq's nuclear experiments at the Osirak 70megawatt reactor and at a nearby small reactor to ensure that they functioned safely. According to Michel Pecqueur, head of the French Atomic Energy Commission (CEA), the presence of French scientists, in addition to regular inspections by the IAEA made it impossible for Iraq to obtain a meaningful amount of nuclear explosive from these reactors without France or the IAEA off fuel supplies immediately.

The CEA also reported that the Soviet and Hungarian inspectors
because Iraq informally objected uranium fuel it has already supplied for Osirak is safe and accounted for in a bunker near the remains of the research reactor.

Agency Inspection

IAEA inspectors were due to arrive in Baghdad Thursday to begin a two or three day inspection of the remains of the reactor and its fuel, which will remain under agency control so long as Iraq adheres to the nuclear nonproliferation treaty, according to officials in Vienna.

The fuel has reportedly been slightly irradiated, making it too hot to handle easily by hand. "Keeps mischievous lingers off," commented one Vienna official.

Meanwhile, French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson repeated an earlier statement by President François Mitterrand that France will only agree to rebuild Osirak if it is absolutely sure the reactor cannot be used for making atomic weapons.

Claims in Senate

Alan Cranston, Democrat of California, said he had obtained four agency documents from U.S. sources that indicate Iraq could have produced enough plutonium annually for three atomic bombs. Although Iraq wants eventually to generate much of its electricity by nuclear means, officials say it is unusual for a country to begin stockpiling uranium fuel before it has built any power reactors unless it anticipates difficulty obtaining supplies in the future. Iraq would certainly have trou-

A second disturbing feature of the Iraqi program, closely related to the first, is Baghdad's decision to order a "bot laboratory" from Italy, which was strongly criticized by the Carter administration at the time. This laboratory can be used to produce radioisotopes for medical use. But it could also be used to separate out plutonium explosive from irradiated uranium.

Deal With Brazil

spent reactor fuel. Brazil has not signed the nonproliferation treaty and is committed by treaty only to keeping Latin America a "nuclear weapons free zone." Officials, therefore, saw a risk that Iraq might have been able to get help from Brazil in making plutonium explosive and also in obtaining fresh supplies of en-riched uranium fuel for Osirak if France followed up on its threat to cut off supplies if the reactor was used for military ends.

Iraq appears to have faithfully reported all its purchases of urani-um to the IAEA as it is bound to do under the nonproliferation trea-

The most worrying purchase, in the view of Western diplomats and IAEA officials, occurred last year when Iraq bought about 10 tons of natural and depleted uranium from West Germany that is suitable for immediate irradiation into plutonium.

Reports to Congress

WASHINGTON (Reuters) -Reports drafted for Congress say the Iraqi nuclear plant bombed by Israel would have taken 10 to 30 years to produce enough plutonium for an explosive device.

The reports also challenged Israel's contention that any delay in the bombing of the plant would have threatened Baghdad with deadly radiation.

The drafts were prepared by the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress. They said if international inspectors and French technicians operating the Iraqi reactor could have been boodwinked, then no more than one kilo (2.2 pounds) of plutonium a year could have been recovered in typical research fashion.

Since more plutonium was required than was actually used in an explosive device, they said, the minimum amount needed would have ranged from 10 to 30 kilos (22 to 66 pounds) - meaning it would have taken 10 to 30 years to produce one device.

Hua Reportedly Completes Re-Indoctrination The Associated Press

PEKING — Hua Guofeng, the embattled chairman of the Chinese Communist Party accused of adhering too elosely to Maoist ideology, has completed eight months of political re-indoctrination at a special party school, European diplomatic sources said Thursday.

The sources said they were told by well-informed Chinese that Mr.

Hua, who had been chosen by Mao to succeed him at the party helm, failed to repent completely. "Courses" at the school usually consist of reading recent speeches by top party officials.

There had been speculation here that Mr. Hua would lose the chairmanship at the upcoming party congress and perhaps be given a deputy chairmanship in a move seen aimed at mollifying his supporters. But the diplomatic sources said they were told he may now just be given mem-

ATHENS — The Greek government Thursday suspended negotiations with Washington over a new defense and economie cooperation agreement to govern the operation of U.S. military bases.

This was partly due to disagreements, but mainly because of the lack of time to have any accord ratified before the parliament recesses before the November elections. An official government announcement said Greece intends resuming the talks after the elections, and that in the meantime the American bases would be allowed to continue normal

JOHANNESBURG — South African security police arrested the news editor of a black newspaper, The Sowetan, after its coverage of police

Thami Mazwai was detained Wednesday night in the hlack township of Soweto. The Sowetan, originally a small weekly, became the daily voice of South Africa's blacks last February after its predecessor, The Post, was forced to close.

Meanwhile, thousands of mixed-race schoolchildren returned to classes Thursday after a three-week protest against the detention of Aziz Jardine, who is still being held without charge.

NATO Group Warns of Soviet Missile Threat United Press International

BRUSSELS - There is an urgent need to match an alarming Soviet deployment of nuclear missiles aimed at Western Europe, a special study group of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has disclosed.

U.S. officials said after a meeting of NATO's Special Consultative Group Wednesday that the Soviet Union now has deployed 220 SS-20 missiles, each with three nuclear warheads capable of reaching any target in Western Europe.

NATO has no land-based nuclear missiles deployed in Western Europe capable of reaching the Soviet Union but the allies decided in late 1979 to aim for a force of 572 Pershing-2 and Cruise missiles that could.

Soviet Dissident Sentenced to Internal Exile

Washington Post Service MOSCOW - Jewish activist Victor Brailovsky was sentenced to five years of internal exile Thursday after being found guilty of anti-Soviet defamation by a Moscow city court at the end of a two-day trial. The sentence was less severe than expected. The maximum punishment is three years' imprisonment in a labor camp, which Mr. Brailovsky's wife, Irina, said after the trial would have "been a death sentence" because of her husband's infirm health. Many U.S. and West European scientists had appealed to the Soviet Union on behalf of the 45-year old cyberneticist.

Mr. Brailovsky had helped organize unofficial scientific seminars in his house for Jews who, like him, have been refused permission to emigrate, and he was editor of a samizdat journal, "Jews in the U.S.S.R." Because Soviet regulations count every day of imprisonment as three days of exile, he effectively will be banished from Moscow for less than

Spadolini Wins Backing

Unless the agreement collapses during the next week or so of fur-ther negotiation, he will become the first non-Christian Democratic premier since the republic was proclaimed in 1946.

But a decided chill has persisted for 18 months and Reagan admin. istration policymakers talk a though they do not expect an very positive openings with Mos cow until next year, especially or strategic arms control of presiden tial summitry.

Their approach has been to use the new administration's first 12 to 18 months to gear up defense spending, rekindle the Western alliances, stake out new arms sales programs in the Middle East, Asia and Latin America, expand strategie relationships with China, Ja-pan, and mercurial allies like Pakistan before entering serious bargaining with Moscow.

cause it allows monitoring of Soviet missile tests from launch through flight over Siberia to dispersion of warheads. It does not permit monitoring of the final stages of flight, including the reentry of the warheads.

The monitoring of missile tests is critical to the verification of Soviet compliance with key provi-sions of strategic arms agreements. It permits the United States, for example, to detect whether new missiles are being developed.

The performance characteristics of missiles are detected in a number of ways, including tracing the missile with radar and monitoring data transmitted by radio signals.

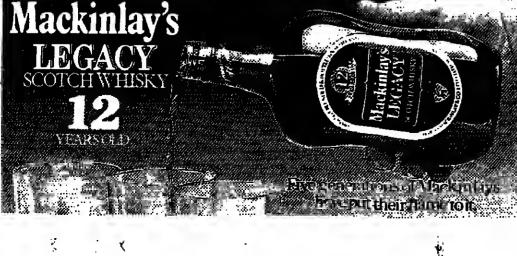

Typically, the United States would be seeking to determine the number of warheads the missile being tested can carry, its range, and the accuracy of re-entry vehi-cles that carry the warheads. Anaiysis of the information can show whether the missile is a new or old model or a variant. The Soviet test base at Leoinsk is used for testing intercontinental ballistic missiles, officials said. The test range extends out over Sibenia, with re-entry over the Kamchatka Peninsula or the western Pacific.

The base at Sary-Shagan is used for testing antiballistic missile sys-tems, according to officials.

White House Aide To Be Supervisor

By George Skelton Los Angeles Times Service WASHINGTON - President Reagan has shaken up his press office, placing it under the supervi-sion of a White House insider and expanding the staff with the addition of a veteran Texas political Senior aides had been reluctant to act on the press office because of the sensitive situation involving James S. Brady, the press secretary who was shot in the head during the March 30 assassination at-tempt on Mr. Reagan. Mr. Brady still holds the title of press secre-tary and its $60.662 salary while recuperating. He has been assured of his job as well.

The person who will handle the press secretary's duties along with other responsibilities is David R. Gergen, until Wednesday the White House staff director, the No. 2 slot under James A. Baker 3d, Mr. Reagan's chief of staff. Mr. Gergen's title will be assistant tions, at the same salary as Mr.

Conservative Democrats Ready To Oppose Reagan on Budget

By Martin Tolchin New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Many conservative Democrats, who thus far have held the balance of power in the budget battle in the House, say that they would support the Democratic leadership and oppose the White House in the coming vote on specific budget cuts.

At the same time, President Reagan's attack Tuesday on Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., Democrat from Massachusetts. appeared to have galvanized the Democrats and weakened the prospects for adoption of a Repubican alternative to the package of $37 billion in hudget cuts ap-proved by 16 committees in the Oemocratic-controlled house. The administration, in pushing for an alternative hudget package, contends that some of the House cuts are illusory, counterproductive and unnecessarily severe, according to several members present.

Mr. Reagan, apparently regret-ful of his public denunciation of Rep. O'Neill, placed a peacemaking telephone call to him Wednesday morning. Other White House spokesmen insisted that Mr. Reagan did not offer Rep. O'Neill an outright apology for the outburst in which Mr. Reagan, after first signaling

On Capitol Hill, at a stormy meeting with Democratic Rep. Phil Gramm of Texas, co-sponsor of the original budget resolution passed by the House with Mr. Reagan's endorsement, most of the 47-member Conservative Democratie Forum said that they resented the president's attacks on budger cuts made by House committees on which they served. The Democrats were clearly heartened by Wednesday's developments, which indicated a severe rift in the coalition of Republicans and conservative Democrats. Some Cuts Restored

The House and Senate last month adopted a budget resolu-tion that instructed committees to make cuts totaling $36 billion. The committees have now made specific cuts that exceed that amount, and the package will reach the House and Senate floor next week. The cuts are from the $740 billion that would be spent in the next fis-

To prevent the Republicans from offering an alternative package. Rep. O'Neill Wednesday withdrew his insistence that floor amendments be allowed on the reconciliation measure in order to restore some of the cuts in social programs. The Education and Labor Committee had restored cuts in social progress that he sought. The committee also restored euts in programs at the administra-tion's behest.

The 242-member House Democrauc Caucus meanwhile gave a rousing ovation to Rep. Jim Wright of Texas, the majority leader, who accused the president of misleading the American public

"The president is responsible for all these cuts, and now he has the audacity to blame us." Rep. Wright said. "It's not the Democrats who would close the 10,000 post offices, it's not the Democrats who would cut back on meals on wheels, it's not the Oemocrats who would cut back on student loans."

The consensus in the Democratic cloakrooms was that Mr. Reagan's attack on the speaker and the congressional Democrats had a unifying effect.

"I think that the press conference has galvanized the Democratic Party," said Rep. Thomas J. Downey of New York.

Asian Whirlpools

A Washington Post editorial published in yesterday's edition of The International Herald Tribune warned wisely that U.S. arms deals with Pakistan and China "deepen the American commitment to regimes of independent purpose and uncertain staying power, and draw the United States further into their respective regional whirlpools." That complex thought merits further consideration, appropriately now while Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. is meeting in Manila with his colleagues from the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN).

The item at the top of the ASEAN agenda at its just completed meeting was Indochina, the focus of the Sino-Soviet conflict in Asia. Vietnam, which China regards as a Soviet surrogate, is the current master of the peninsula. And the cockpit is Cambodia, where China is supporting the efforts of the barbarous Pol Pot to expel the Vietnamese occupiers. No one really likes Pol Pot, but some in ASEAN regard him as a better alternative than Soviet-Vietnamese imperialism. Others worry more about Chinese designs.

The U.S. decision in principle to sell lethal military equipment to China needlessly complicates the situation. The U.S. intention is that whatever arms are sold will strengthen the Chinese posture against the Soviet Un-ion. But by extension that could mean they will be available for use against the Vietnamese. What does that notion do to ASEAN's effort to draw Vietnam into a dialogue aimed at returning Cambodia to some form of independence? Similarly, who can say that these arms will not one day be used against Taiwan, although at the moment it seems unlikely?

There are numerous questions of that kind that might be asked. There are also some of another category. What kind of U.S. arms will it take to make China's People's Liberation Army (PLA) a better match for the Red Army? The Chinese are already tying down one-fourth of the Soviet Union's land forces along their 4,700-mile frontier. Or is selling arms to China mainly a political sop to the PLA, many of whose top officers are unhappy with the economic and political priorities of China's most influential leader, Deng Xiaoping? And, of course, how will the Soviet Union respond to this new U.S.-Chinese relationship? It may not be called an alliance, but the difference between a friendly arms-supply relationship and an alliance could easily be lost on Moscow.

The disclosure that the United States and China have already been collaborating on a missile-monitoring station in Western China near the Soviet border adds further complications. While it was a secret, the Soviet Union could go along with it. But now that word of its existence has been leaked in Washington, the Russians must respond, especially in the light of the U.S. decision to sell China arms and Secretary Haig's challenging references to Soviet "hegemony" while he was in Peking. No one can be sure exactly how the Russians will react, but it is unlikely to be with concessions on Cambodia, Afghanistan or Poland.

Similar questions arise over the $3 billion military and economic aid deal the United States has made with Pakistan and the separate agreement to sell Pakistan advanced F-16 fighter planes. Will Pakistan really be better able to deter a Soviet attack if it should come over the fact that Pakistan provides refuge for Afghan guerrillas?

In addition, it may be that the United States does not intend to fuel an arms race in the subcontinent by supplying Pakistan with up-to-date weapons, but can Washington really control the direction in which Pakistan will aim those weapons? At a time when Pakistan's relations with India, which traditionally are as cold as the grave, are showing slight signs of warming, was this really the best time for such a deal?

Anti-Sovietism may have its place in U.S. diplomacy, but it cannot be a substitute for diplomacy. The Reagan administration's policies in this sphere may be less crude than they seem. But in the absence of a convincingrationale for the decisions emerging from Washington, no one will believe it and that will create its own reality

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

Most French voters, and France's allies, must have read the election returns with the strongest sense of relief. François Mitterrand's election raised a possibility of deadlock between a Socialist president, committed to a leftist program, and a recalcitrant National Assembly. No doubt the prospect of stalemate, evoking recollections of the worst moments of French politics, contributed to the left's terrific victory in last Sunday's first-round vote for the next assembly. It promises a legislature fully in harmony with the new president. The French believe, on the basis of much experience, that political division and weakness is never safe.

This ringing reaffirmation of France's turn to the left will inevitably create strains elsewhere in Europe. For the past seven years, most of Europe's crucial decisions were based on the close relations between the strong and assured governments of a centerright French president, Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, and a center-left West German chancellor, Helmut Schmidt. The emergence of a strongly Socialist France puts a new and highly inconvenient pressure on Mr. Schmidt in West Germany. He has suffered a series of reverses recently in domestic politics, and the scale of the Socialist gains in France will now increase his difficulties in controlling the left wing of his own party. As the ambitions of the German left rise, they awaken apprehensions among Mr. Schmidt's indispensable al-lies on the other side, the small liberal party that provides his parliamentary majority. There's currently a wave of speculation in West Germany that neither the chancellor nor his government will complete the fouryear parliamentary term to which they were

A party that comes to power in a landslide election, after nearly a generation in the opposition, has to deal with extraordinarily high expectations of its supporters. But Mr. Mitterrand and the new National Assembly are going to have to work under the close constraints represented by the European Community. France is now poised to pursue Socialism in an economy that is highly integrated with the rest of Western Europe's.

Last weekend's preliminary victory seems very likely to be confirmed next Sunday in the final round of voting. It would leave no doubt of Mr. Mitterrand's strength at home, and his ability to get the legislation that he wants. But the extent to which France can depart from the Western European consensus is less clear. Since Mr. Mitterrand has now overwhelmed his domestic opposition, the test of his statecraft may well be his ability to work with the other governments of Eu-

Iran's Own Mess

A formidable witness has now asserted that Iran has not been liberated by the overthrow of the shah. Iran's President Bani-Sadr could not have been more categorical: "Of the three slogans of the Islamic revolution - independence, freedom and Islamic republic nothing has been left."

With extraordinary courage, Mr. Bani-Sadr confronted his clerical tormentors and accused them of imposing a lawless tyranny in the name of Islam. So he is now branded a traitor and faces likely impeachment, or worse if the mobs have their way.

But this time the mess is Iran's own. There is no plausible way the zealots can blame the Great Satan across the seas. Nor does the turmoil create a windfall for the Soviet Union, as was once feared. Moscow seems as frustrated as Washington by Iran's theocratically defined political quarrels. Its own mstrument in Iran, the Tudeh Party, has obsequiously backed Ayatollah Khomeini. Yet now the Tudeh newspaper has reportedly been banned, along with other secularist publications.

Indeed, all secular-minded Iranians clearly underestimated the force of Iran's fundamentalism. The shah paid with his throne for failing to take the mullahs seriously enough. Then Premier Bazargan and now President Bani-Sadr and their Western-educated allies believed they could work with the ayatollah and 50,000 mullahs in reshaping Iran along vaguely leftist and democratic lines. They failed, however, to weld alliances with other secular left-wing parties or with what was left of the armed forces, and they have been hopelessly outmaneuvered, Mr. Bani-Sadr depends pathetically on the undefined power of the 81-year-old Imam in Qum - and so does Iran.

Americans no longer have any influence on Iran's power struggles, but they have not ceased to care about the country's fate. When Iran mocks its own Constitution and devours a fairly elected president, it brings further discredit to its revolution and instability to

Mr. Bani-Sadr accuses his clerical opponents of ordering executions, silencing dissent, mismanaging the economy and subverting efforts to end the war with Iraq. For this he is accused of blasphemy. It is sad and ominous, not just for Mr. Bani-Sadr but for the Iranian people.

BERLIN - In the naval history of the German Empire there has never been greater activity displayed in the dockyards and naval depots than at present. New slips at Kiel and Wilhelmshaven are being constructed to accommodate ships of more than 24,000 tons, and it has been decided to widen the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal at Kiel, one of the most important strategic connections in time of war. In one respect, the German authorities have shown reluctance in taking the initiative. While all other first class paval powers have long since been in possession of flotillas of submersible and submarine boats. Germany has not yet decided on any definite type, and has only just completed its first submarine.

PARIS - Today's editorial in the Herald reads: "Placing a bronze statue of Jefferson Davis in the capitol at Washington may be variously regarded, according to patriotic bias or prejudice. But it has proved once more the solid refusion of the North and South of the United States. No voice was raised in protest: The moral gulf that was still visible when Virginia sent Robert E. Lee's statue to Washington in 1908 has closed at last. North and South are truly one. The president of the Southern Confederacy stood like a rock for what he believed to be right. Slavery was part of his moral code. He did not see its evils and the hopes to reform it; he regarded it as good, as part of the divine order."

nswer to the decade-old dilemma

L ONDON - When African leaders assemble for their principal annual get-together in Nairobi, many of them will turn toward Paris. France has called so many of the shots in Africa for the last 100 years that the new Socialist regime is worth more than a passing glance.

French policy has long been one of supporting those who supported France. Allegiance to the West is also important for France in a geo-political sense; less so in the adherpointed sense; less so in the ather-ence to Western democratic princi-ples and the defense of human rights. The possession of scarce raw materials is also a major pole of attraction, though in this case the competition is less East-West than inter-West.

Gala Reception

All these policies came together in the unfortunate case of the Emperor Jean-Bedel Bokassa and the Central African Republic. Although Valery Giscard d'Estaing's over-close relationship with the emperor contributed to his defeat at the polls. France's serious courting of Mr. Bokassa began with De

De Gaulle gave Mr. Bokassa a grandiose official visit to Paris, a triumphal drive down the Champs d'Elysées, a gala night at the theater, and a ceremonial dinner at De Ganlle's residence. De Ganlle's dinner speech was sycophantic. He lauded the Central African government's achievements and added. "Mr. President, I insist on saying that this is the case more than ever and that your personality has contributed much of it." Eight weeks after De Gaulle's ceremonial welcome, Mr. Bokassa liquidated his former finance minister, Alexandre Banza, in circumstances according to Le Monde as "so revolting that it still makes one's flesh creep."

The French press did their best to highlight the goings on while foreign minister. Maurice Schumann, did his best to placate Mr. Bokassa. In one carefully worded message, be wrote to Mr. Bokassa, "You have understood quite well that there is nothing in common between what some more or less well-informed journalist thinks he can print and the brotherly respect in which the French government has always beld the Central African Republic

Different?

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing continued down a well-trodden path. He chose the Central African Republic for his first presidential visit and publicly called his host during one trip "a cherished relative," an endearment which Mr. Bokassa enjoyed repeating not least when the affair of the murdered children and the presents of diamonds blew up into major scandals.

Will a Socialist France be signif-icantly different? Or will the traditional interests and methods of France's African diplomacy remain the same? The first area to watch is human rights. The Socialist Party's policy document on Africa, published in April, criticizes "the constant support for the regime of Mobuto Sese Seko in its most scandalous aspects."

It is unlikely however that presi-

With a little more air to breathe, some of the political exiles from Zaire might be able to organize a more credible alternative. Then there is the question of Ahmed Sekou Toure of Guines. Although Mr. Toure has now at Although Mr. Joure has now as last taken significant steps to move outside the Soviet orbit, he still has large numbers of political prisoners. Military Challenges

Washing of the graduation address at West Point, President Reagan re-emphasized his determination to spend more money for defense. Sustaining the political momentum for such increases may prove difficult; still, it will be easier than facing two fundamental military challenges that the administration has so far chosen to avoid.

The first and most obvious of these is that of discriminating between weapons that are effective and those that merely cost a lot of

To survey the first-line equipment of each service — the Army's new Abrams tank, the Navy's Tri-dent submarine and F-18 fighter, the Air Force's MX missile, F-15 fighter, and various "smart" missiles — is to see a common pattern. The weapons cost between two and 10 times as much as the systems they replace; their technical complexity leads to behind-schedule deliveries and long periods in the repair shops; and their performance is better suited to computer-simulated war games than to the unpredictability and disorder that have typified real combat. In its proposal for increased spend-ing, the administration has asked for more of the same.

Concerning Men

The second challenge is more. difficult. ft concerns men rather

Although nearly all discussions of the U.S. military focus on weaponry, those who have studied the history of combat or have commanded troops consistently stressmanded troops consistently stress that machines count for less in warfare than do intangible human qualities, such as "leadership" and esprit de corps. They say that the effectiveness of a fighting force depends finally on the creation of a series of human bonds: These bonds must rum among soldiers in small groups, between the soldiers and the officers who lead them, and between the military as a and the others who lead then, and between the military as a whole and the nation it defends. They are described as "moral" bonds, because they are woven through demonstrations of shared respect and mutual sacrifice. Soldiers will take risks to defend their comrades who would do the same for them. Armies will sacrifice to defend a nation that respects the sacrifices they make.

To talk with soldiers these days is to hear that these bonds have been seriously eroded by the creation of the all-volunteer force.

Another Job?

One source of erosion is the idea, inherent in the concept of a volunteer army, that military service is just another job. In the past, the bonds among soldiers had grown naturally among men who worked together, are together, and the enlisted force is married and lives in town - and when soldiers, like other workers, have the right

o "quit."
When President Reagan
promised at West Point to provide "better working conditions" for the U.S. military, he reflected the belief that the economic incentives that monvate most parts of the labor force are appropriate for the military as well. Many soldiers say that their duties are different from those of civilians and that while increased pay may help convince skilled technicians and noncom-missioned officers to re-enlist, it is finally as impossible to "buy" a dedicated fighting force as to buy dedicated doctors and clergymen. The "moral" bonds have been eakened in another, more complicated way. As many in the armed forces are the first to notice. bonds of shared loyalty and respect do not naturally grow between an affluent nation and the poor people to whom it has con-tracted its defense.

Education Factor

I bring to this subject the perspective of a late-1960s college student who, for reasons partly of principle and partly of expedience, avoided military, service during Vietnam.

What was true then - that an unfair system of conscription deflected the costs of the conflict away from those with most influ-ence in our society, thereby demo-ralizing the Army and prolonging the war — has now been institutionalized in more extreme form through the volunteer force. It is because of the experience of those-years, not in spite of it, that I am so concerned about the consequences of having a volunteer

Today's Army consists of a cross-section of black America, plus the least-educated and least wealthy whites. As the sociologist Charles Moskos has pointed ont, the enlisted ranks of the Army are the only place in major U.S. insti-tutions in which the average black is better educated than the average white. Meanwhile, a smaller and smaller portion of educated America has any first-hand exposure to the military and any direct stake in its performance and the uses to which it is put.

Spending more money on the military will not earn it the nation's respect. That requires the creation of a force more representative of the country it is meant to defend — which, in turn; will al-most certainly require the draft.

One way to handle, or evade, that question would be to say that Israel is preparing a response to that right now and he wanted to see what Prime Minister Menachem Begin had to say. That would have been better than "I'll have to think about that ... On arms sales to the People's Republic of China, he treated it as "a normal part of the process of improving U.S. relations there." Does he realize that it was the most far-reaching decision he has made so far? If so, wouldn't a few sentences be in order explaining his reasons for taking such a step Perhaps a word or two to 17 million nervous people on Taiwan, who could use more encourage ment at this time than a vague promise to "live up to the Taiwan Relations Act"?

On the question of whether war in Europe could be contained or would likely spread to super-power nuclear war, he showed no sign of understanding what part of our NATO defense strategy is the threat of massive retaliation. The tricky answer - intended to reas-sure U.S. allies, but not to relax them - has been in presidential briefing books for decades.

Arms to Pakistan

On providing $3 billion in arms to Pakistan, did we get any as-surances that the Pakistanis would not try to build an atomic bomb? Or share one with Libya? His answer was, "I won't answer."

That won't do; even if a president wants to conceal the main part of the answer, he should have few sentences to offer to show he's aware of the problem and is dealing with it. A president should not declare any subject totally ta-

The fact is that a presidential press conference requires at least two days of hard homework. His staff will prepare about 75 questions, covering the approximately 25 that will be asked in a half hour and all those that go unasked. These, along with suggested an-swers, go into his "black book" for review, occasional challenge and memorization.

All presidents of the last two decades have done that homework. The purpose of the exercise is not merely to put on a good performance but to force policy decisions and keep the president informed. It consumes time, but it keeps him on top of his job.

This president has been skimping on his preparation, neglecting the black book, relying instead on oral give-and-take with his aides for a couple of hours before press conferences. He thinks he can

Flunking the Test

Some member of the inner circle with a great sense of security should tell him that this is how a democracy tests its leader's range of comprehension and that he has As his conduct in debate has shown, Mr. Reagan has the mental capacity to absorb briefings and to think on his feet. All it takes is a change in priority of his time and a lot of hard studying. When he hears a Spanish-language question-er use the words "undocumented alien," he need not brush him off with a smile: Those words should trigger a crisp 60-second report on his visit with Mexico's President Lopez Portillo.

A president should use the press conference as a forum to get across his ideas in capsule form. He should not leave the viewer hoping to hear the sound of the bell before the man in the arena hurts himself.

A quotation widely distributed by Israel's Foreign Ministry and used in this space last Friday (IHT, June 12), purportedly from a Baghdad-newspaper, was false. No specific threat that Irag's nu-clear facility was intended for use

Criticism of Reagan Grows at OAU Talks

By Pranay B. Gupte

NAIROBI - President Reagan's dministration is coming under inreasing criticism from a growing number of African leaders who are oeginning to believe that the Unitd States is leaning toward the white minority government in South Africa at the expense of libration movements.

Foreign ministers of 50 states scionging to the Organization of African Unity unanimously en-lorsed a report Thursday drafted by the OAU Liberation Commitce — which reviews colonial prob-ems — that heavily criticized what t characterized as the "overt and overt collusion of the United states, Britain, France, Canada, Vest Germany and other powers with the South African racists."

Several leading African diplo-nats later spoke bitterly about vhat they perceived as Mr. leagan's efforts to turn the clock during tack on the independence of outh-West Africa (Namibia), as ne delegate put it. Peter Aueshihange, foreign secretary of he South-West Africa People's brganization, a guerrilla group hich is fighting a guerrilla war ear the Angolan border against outh African forces, vowed to ontinue the struggle "in spite of leagan, or even because of him."

African analysts who have gathed here said that Thursday's AU report seemed to reject the ew expressed by members of the eagan administration that the wernment of Angola as well as ie representatives of SWAPO are part of a conspiracy by the Sovi-Union to undermine moderate vernments in Africa.

The report questioned the will ad ability of the so-called Westn contact group for Namibia, hich consists of the United ates, Canada, West Germany, citain and France, to bring about settlement. Specifically many Afcan diplomats here charge that ir. Reagan is being duped by instituted new sanctions against South Africa.

The ministers condemned "the emerging unholy alliance between Pretoria and Washington characterized by baseless hostility against Angola, and their collusion to intensify acts of destabilization in that country."

A number of African delegates attending the current summit sessions say they are dismayed about reports circulating here that Mr. Reagan intends to make Deputy Secretary of State William P. Clark his primary adviser on Africa. Mr. Clark last week visited South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe and in the opinion of several African diplomats who nevertheless wished not to be named, did not make much of an impact on black lead-

This is the same Clark who couldn't even name the Zimbabwe prime minister during his confir-mation hearings," one diplomat said. "It seems preposterous that Reagan should even consider such a man for Africa. It shows a lack of sensitivity."

UN Resolution

The ministers urged an immediate and unconditional implementation of the UN resolution for the independence of Namibia without any "prevarication, qualification or modification." The resolution calls for elections to be beld under the supervision of the United Nations, while a proposal by the Reagan administration suggests that a constitutional conference should be held first.

Opponents of the Reagan proposal argue that if a constitutional conference were to be held first, the white minority in Namibia could gain influence far beyond its

Some of the participants in the current summit say they are per-plexed at what one Zambian dele-gate called the seeming absence of clear policy for Africa on the part diplomat said, "Everything Reagan has said so far, including his television interview in which he praised South Africa for being such a good American ally, everything so far points to a pro-South Africa policy. The Americans don't seem to understand black African sensitivities,"

Some delegates pointed to remarks made by Foreign Minister Ishaya S. Audu of Nigeria earlier this year during his visit to the United States. He said that African states should give the Reagan administration more time to fashion its policies, especially with regard to Namibia,

Abnormal Fetus Killed, Twin Born Healthy

By Harold M. Schmeck Jr.

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Doctors at Mr. Sinai School of Medicine reported that they punctured the heart of an abnormal fetus to destroy it in the womb while leaving its normal twin to survive and be born healthy more than four months lat-

The procedure, performed last year but revealed Wednesday, was the first such successful surgery in the United States and the second in the world. The objective was to give a childless 40-year-old woman with fertility problems a chance to have a normal baby. She had decided to abort both fetuses if there was no way to save the oormal one alone, the doctors said.

The abnormal fetus was killed withdrawing about half its blood through a hollow needle in-serted in the beart, which then stopped beating.

The operation was described as extremely difficult. The needle had to hit a moving target less than an inch across, which was accomplished on a second attempt. There was risk of killing both fetuses. damaging the abnormal one with-out killing it or even killing the normal one by mistake.

A report in The New England Journal of Medicine said the mother desperately wanted to have the normal child but could not face the burden of caring for an abnormal one. The authors were Dr. Thomas D. Kerenyi, clinical professor of obstetrics and gynecology, and Dr. Usha Chit-

U.S. Writers Average Less Than $5,000 a Year in Earnings From Their Work

By Herbert Mitgang New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Despite big movie and paperback deals that convey an impression of glam-our and prosperity, the average author in the United States doesn't live on Easy Street. He or she earns less than $5,000 a year from writing, and has to make ends meet with the help of other jobs or a working spouse.

These are among the results of a study issued this week by Columbia University's Center for the Social Sciences about the economics. and frustrations, of professional

Based on responses from 2,239 authors producing books in every field of fact and fiction - all were pledged anonymity — the 150-page "Columbia University Survey of American Authors" is the most detailed account ever made of how writers earn a living, or don't. published.

The survey notes that there is a great earnings gulf. There are writers living on the poverty level, and others, in the top 10 percent, making $45,000 or more a year. Those in the top 5 percent have incomes of $80,000 or beyond.

"It is plain that the average authors of published books eke out a modest income from their writing, approximately $4,775 a year, or about two-thirds of the maximum amount paid to individuals on Social Security," said Robert K. Merton, special service professor and university professor emeritus, who collaborated on the study with Paul W. Kingston and Jonathan R.

The study for the Anthors Guild Foundation was in the works for almost two years. These are its main income findings:

• The representative (that is. median) author in the 1979 sample

 Professional authors survived because almost half held jobs in addition to writing. These had in-comes from writing of about $2,600 a year, which they attributed to lack of writing time.

 Of full-time authors (those who held no other jobs and devoted at least 25 hours a week to writing), 31 percent made less than $5,000 from writing, and two-thirds did not reach $20,000.

 Of recently published authors (whose books appeared between 1977 and 1980), half earned less than $5,000 in 1979.

The economic picture changed sharply for most authors when their other personal and family incomes were added to their writing incomes. While only one in 10 made a fair living from writing, the majority had "non-writing jobs which produce substantially higher

Thus, authors reported median personal incomes of $27,000, which included writing, professional payments, salaries, return from investments (including those jointly held with a spouse), pen-sions and Social Security. The median family total for all authors was $38,000. Half of the authors in the survey had spouses with jobs. The study identifed five categories of American anthors: 1. Committed full-timers (35 percent of the total) spend at least 25 hours a week writing and hold no other paid job (though in some cases they earn related income from editing, translation and the

who had had at least one book of $4.90 - and half of the authors 2. Limited full-timers (18 percent) report spending no more than 25 hours a week writing and hold no other regular paid job.

3. Committed part-timers (13 percent) hold paid jobs other than freelance writing, yet average 25 or more hours a week writing.

4. Intermittent part-timers (22 percent) hold paid jobs other than writing and devote a smaller but still considerable number of hours each week to their writing.

5. Marginal part-timers (12 percent) hold paid jobs unconnected with writing and put in fewer than 10 hours a week writing.

The categories are not rigid. One author commented on the survey questionnaire, "I work (that is, hold another job) only when I have to." Just a few months earlier, he would have been considered a fulltimer; when the survey was made, he had become a part-timer.

The researchers stressed that a large majority of anthors -70 percent — were actively engaged in some other paid work. The largest number, 38 percent, taught in universities - "not surprising," the survey noted, "because colleges provide . . . flexible hours, time off between semesters, library and other research facilities and, some-times, collegial encouragement." When asked, "If you could at least match your present total in-come by writing full-time, would you drop your other work?" 46 percent responded "yes" and 22 percent replied "possibly." The survey disclosed a fairly clear relationship between financial success and types of writing. Genre fiction (romance, detective, Western, Gothic — as opposed to general adult fiction) was the most hicrative. Twenty percent of genre fiction writers earned more than $50,000, but about 40 percent earned less than $5,000.

Dance in London

Cunningham Inventive, Music Crude

By Noel Goodwin

ONDON - Merce Cunningham's return to London with his dance company led off the "American Dance Season" at Sadler's Wells Theater.

Cunningham is characteristically inventive in his repertory this time, but has drawn a smaller public response than on his previous London visit a year ago. Various reasons for this have been suggested, from the adverse economic circumstances affecting young people - to whom his work most appeals to a growing feeling that his individual choreographic style has become overly repetitive. The latter impression is certainly refuted by his latest work, "Gallopade," which premiered at Sadler's Wells.

Bearing such whimsical subtitles for its different sections as "The Bed-Ridden Hop and Chess Game" or "L'Amour and the Game" or "L'Amour and the Bounce Dance," it is a cheerfully lighthearted sequence of playful dances (the chess game bit involves the men lifting their partners to displace others), which is continuously diverting to watch. Mark Lancaster's costumes are gandy belted shirts over tights, all in dif-ferent colors, and Takehisa Kosuşi manipulates a battery of electronic resources to generally decorative graphic invention in a less frivo-lous mood. The title alludes to the ingenious ways in which the eight dancers at the start are exchanged for seven others; tha subtle greens and greys of costumes by Jasper Johns are exchanged for rose and lilac tints, and the measured pace of the initial movement is exchanged for increasingly lively sequences, especially for the wom-

I would have welcomed some equivalent changes of texture in the electronic soundscape provided for this by David Tudor, who was at the controls; it seemed only to get louder. Perhaps the least appealing aspect of the Cunningham company's development is the way that his longtime musical associate, John Cage, and the other composer-musicians working with him in mostly electro-acoustic textures have been content for these to remain in a crude and elementary state when they might be capable of so much more.

International Course

It will therefore be of particular interest to discover what results Cunningham and Cage together will obtain when they return to London in late August to direct for the first time the International Dance Course for Professional Choreographers and Composers at the University of Surrey campus near Guildford, Now funded by member states of the European Economic Community, its prime purpose since it was instituted in 1975 is to promote closer creative collaboration between choreographers and composers for their mirtual benefit. After a break last year, the course is being resumed with eight choreographers and eight composers selected from the participating countries (this time including Britain, France, West Germany, Greece, Ireland and Italy) who work with a pool of professional dancers and musicians for two weeks of intensive creative projects, away from the pressures of public performance. The value of past courses, directed in turn by Robert Cohan, Norman Morrice and Glen Tetley, is now becoming

The American Dance Season continues through July 11. Following Conningham next week are Twyla Tharp and company for two weeks, and the final week features a group described as "Ballet Stars of America," led by Martine van Hamel and Kevin McKenzie of the American Ballet Theatre.

Eszter Kovács as Brümhäde in the final scene of

Lyons Stages Full 'Ring'

By David Stevens

International Herald Tribune YONS - The Lyons Opera has both ended its season and begon the city's annual festival with a complete cycle of Wagner's "Ring" tetralogy, performed in the regulation Bayreuth time span of six days. That news might get a resounding "so what" on the other side of the Rhine, but no one here could remember when a French opera house last managed this feat; cer-tainly not Paris, where two "Ring" projects have sunk in midstream in the last 15 years. It is a drain on tha the biggest theaters, and for Lyons — which, however en-terprising, is a provincial house of limited resources - it was a tour de force of organization, logistics and all around stamina.

This cycle was the climax of an effort of three years. Originally conceived for the Opera du Rhin in Strasbourg, to be produced in what is fundamentally a concert hall, without wings or flies, it became a joint project with Lyons, where the performances were in the opera house. Each company produced two works, but after a change in management Strasbourg seems to have lost interest in 2 complete cycle. Lyons, however, began in late April to remount the four music dramas, giving each one three performances and winding up with the full cycle.

This history suggests some of the limitations under which Gabor Otvös, the conductor; Nicolas Joël, the stage director, and Pet Halmen, the designer, had to work. Their reach frequently exceeded their grasp, in this case no bad thing, but there was a vigor and freshness to their collective work that sustained the result through some lean patches.

Joël, a former assistant of Patrice Chéreau and Jean-Pierre Ponnella (both of whom have pro-duced the "Ring" in Germany), aimed on one hand at blending the outward trappings of the myth with visible signs of its allegorical significance (capitalism and the In-dustrial Revolution), and on the other hand at making the singers provide the movement and convey the story.

So Halmen's basic unit set - a pair of arched walls that might be a palace or a river bank -- enclosed changing details for each scene. Siegfried and Mime lived in a humble forge-cum-bedroom with bunk beds, but in the shadows beyond were the tree roots of the mythical setting. The Norns told their tale in a landscape of collaps-ing telephone poles and wires. The costumes were vaguely modern, Siegfried a kind of Boy Scout, Hagen in quasi military garb, the Wanderer in a long loden coat and floppy hat.

The movement was often illuminating, as in the garrulous and in-herently static question scene of the Wanderer and Mime, but sometimes irritating movement for its own sake, as in the Erda-Wanderer encounter. A persistent weakness, at least in the final two dramas, was the lack of any sense of presence of the Rhine, and at the end Hagen was not swept away in the water but just seemed to sit down and sulk because he could not have the ring.

The generally strong casting in "Siegfried" and "Die Götterammerung" was headed by the tower-ing Wanderer of Leif Roar, majestic yet very human in his decline. Pentti Perksalo (in "Siegfried") and Toni Kraemer were unever Siegfrieds, sometimes imposing, sometimes raw-toned and clumsy Heinz Klaus Ecker was a powerful Hagen; Paul Crook a sharply drawn, well sung Mime; Har Tschammer a resonant Fafner, and Dieter Behlendorf a malevolent, leather-jacketed Alberich.

The Brünnhilde of Eszter Kovács was a puzzlement. Her soprano is powerful without being ample, her acting tender and womanly without suggesting the former warrior maiden. Her unevenness in "Götterdämmerung" may have had something to do with having sung the same crushing role the day before in Florence. A Flagstad might flag under that schedule. Otvös is an experienced hand with this music, and his conduct-ing was well paced and alert to de-Lyon, however, has neither the res onance nor the sustained technical security to go the route without mishap. In the matter of sound, this is perhaps as much a matter of instruments as of style.

If Grane, Brünnhilde's horse, was absent from this "Ring," it was because the animal was otherwise employed across town at the . Theatre National Populaire in another mammoth undertaking, Patrice Chéreau's staging of Ibsen's .
"Peer Gynt," uncut, in two parts. It too has been packing the house, even for a marathon session Saturday in which both parts were given in one day. "Peer Gynt" has more than a mythical Nordic steed in common with the "Ring." It is of the same vast conception, it had its world premiere in the same year (1876), and it shares many underlying themes in the story of the man who travels through folklore, fantasy and the real world in vain search of himself. Chéreau's production, with Richard Peduzzi's sets and Jacques Schmidt's costumes, is rich in the-atrical imagination (the shipwreck scene brought the house down) and hard-bitten in its view of the characters. The huge and excellent cast is headed by Gerard Desarthe, constantly onstage as a Peer Gynt who goes through various stages of disorientation to final collapse. and the inimitable Maria Casares as his mother, Ase, tiny but of great tensile strength. In place of Grieg, Fiorenzo Carpi's offstage chamber music seemed right in this context

The production will come to the Theatre de la Ville in Paris for an extended run in the fall.

A controller monitors oil in the Trans-Alaska Pipeline. Energy experts believe massive domestic production may help the United States become independent of foreign oil by 2000.

U.S. Oil Independence Seen

By Joanne Omang Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Although some hardly dare believe it, a number of respected energy analysts are talking of an end to U.S. oil imports before the year 2000.

The new statistics are loaded with caveats among them no Mideast wars or Arab embargoes - and often denounced by other researchers, but even critics agree that import cuts will be drastic enough by the 1990s to at least end U.S. reliance on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting

The vision of total oil independence is non-ideological, coming both from conservative thinkers such as Milton Copulos of the Washington based Heritage Foundation and from more liberal theoreticians such as Henry Kelly, a former asso-ciate director of the Department of Energy's Solar Energy Research Institute, now with the congressional Office of Technology Assessment. Even the Department of Energy sees the 21st century dawning with imports at one-third current levels, without any extraordinary government policy

The major dissenters are big oil companies sueb as Exxon, whose executives see imports holding roughly steady into the next century, and conservationists who fear that the end of federal help will cripple the energy-saving trend.

Although the vision of an energy self-sufficient nation is by no means guaranteed and far from unanimous, its propooents say it will result from three trends: unprecedented domestic energy conservation, soaring oil drilling rates at home and a domestic fleet of automobiles that get up to 55 miles per gallon of gasoline. It is the first time that the notion of import independence has been considered without the assumption of a major social transformation.

Energy independence has been a subject of na-tional discussion since the Mideast oil embargo rocked the world economy with tripled oil prices in 1973. But despite the creation of an Energy Department, former President Jimmy Carter's declaration of the "moral equivalent of war" on energy waste and megahombs of political rhetoric, oil imports hit their peak in 1977 at 8.8 million barrels a day, or 6,100 barrels a minute, 48 percent of U.S. oil demand.

President Reagan took office promising to unleash U.S. industry on the problem of energy gluttony, calling it a national security concern and one of his top priorities. One of his first acts was to complete decoured of oil prices, arguing that it would stimulate production and slow demand.

But by last March, before any change in policy had had time to have any effect, oil imports already were down to 5.8 million barrels a day, lower than anyone had predicted and lower than Mr. Carter vowed to achieve by 1985.

Automobile mileage is going up faster than Do troit argued was possible, and domestic oil pro-duction is not failing off as fast as the experts

U.S. Says Economy Stagnant in Spring

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy wited in the spring and would probably show no growth in the current quarter. Commerce Department sources said Thursday. But the officials said the data indicated that inflation had also Separately, the department an-nounced that the U.S. recorded a $3.1 billion surplus in its current account in the first quarter following a revised $1.4 billion surplus in the 1980 fourth quarter.

The projections on economic growth came as the Commerce Department was releasing new revisions showing that the gross national product, even after being adjusted for inflation, grew at a ro-bust annual rate of 8.6 percent in the January-March quarter.

The annual growth rate for real GNP — the inflation-adjusted value of the nation's goods and ser-vices — was revised upward from 8.4 percent and was the biggest quarterly gain since early 1978. Inflation during the firt quarter rose at an annual rate of 9.8 percent, as measured by GNP-connected figures. Shortly after the GNP report was released, Commerce's acting chief economist, William Cox, issued a statement saying real GNP "will show little change" in the declined to release the exact number for what Commerce calls its "flash" GNP estimate. However, other sources, asking not to be identified, said the estimate shows an no growth. The estimate also shows an annual infla-tion rate of 6.1 percent in the sec-ond quarter, as measured by the broadly based GNP implicit price

Initially, the department set the fourth quarter current account sur-plus at $687 million. Because of revisions, the department now estimates that the United States regis-tered a $3.72 hillion surplus in 1980, instead of $118 million as re-

The first quarter surplus was attributable to declines in the merebandise trade deficit, net service receipts, and net unilateral trans-fers. The merchandise trade deficit fell to $4.6 billion in the first quarter from $5.6 billion in the final three months of 1980.

The current accounts balance was revised upward for each of last year's four quarters. During the first balf of 1980, the department said, the United States recorded a current account deficit of $2.6 billion, instead of $5.1 billion dirs. During the second half of the year, the surplus was put at $6.4 billion, instead of $5.2 billion.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE, FRIDAY, JUNE 19, 1981 Vast Expansion of Venture Capital Business Results in Growing Pains will respond Paul M. Wythes, a partner in Paul M. Wythes, a partner in Capital business is booming, but the paul M. Wythes, a partner in Capital Ventures of Cabifornia, Sutter Hill Ventures of Cambridge is not all that happy about it.

By Andrew Pollack

Venture capitalists, be say to invent Venture capitalists, he says, are paying a lot more to invest in young companies and are being pressed to make quick decisions in order not to miss an opportunity. They're writing a check a lot faster," added Mr. Wythes, explaining that start-up companies are able to pil investment firms such as his against one another.

The underlying reason for these changes in the venture capital business, Mr. Wythes and others say, is that there is more money around than there are opportunities for investment

Now there are so many people out there with capital to invest that the initiative seems to have gone from the entrepreneur looking for money to the money looking for entrepreneurs," said W.J. Sanders 3d, the chairman of Advanced Micro Devices, a California semiconductor company.

Indeed, the venture capital industry is ewash in money. The of $10 million in 1975, when the industry was in the doldrums.

Capital Gains Change

At the same time the amount of money invested by venture capitalists in smaller businesses rose to $1 billion from $250 million in 1975, according to the Venture Capital Journal, an industry publication. Investments by venture capital companies come not only from money from outside investors but also from the income from their existing investments.

Virtually all the growth has come since 1978, when the capital gains tax was reduced to a maximum rate of 28 perceot, from 49 percent, allowing long-term inves-tors to keep more of their winn-

Another factor contributing to the gain is that the public's bunger for technology stocks has made it easy for young companies to go public at high price-earnings ra-tics, virtually insuring that a venture capital company will recoup its investment quickly. Also, equity in a young company is considered one of the few investments that tors, such as pension funds, rose to spending a larger percentage of the money is being spent on start-up companies, as opposed to additional financing for new companies. A survey by the National Venture Capital Association, the industry lobbying organization, found that start-ups accounted for 42 perceot of the new investments 1980, up from 29 percent in 1975. That has created a demand for people to man the new opera-

Active Recruiting

Venture capitalists are taking e more aggressive role in forming companies, rather than waiting for an entrepreneur to come along seeking backing. "It's a trend that's just beginning." said Stanley L. Pratt, publisher of the Venture Capital Journal.

The recruiting by venture capitalists of people to form companies is especially prevalent in the biotechnology industry. Whereas the electronics industry has a sup-ply of experienced entrepreceurs. most of the experts in fields such as genetic engineering are in uni-versities and research laboratories.

When T.A. Associates of Boston

In addition to the increase in and the Inco Securities decided and received backing from venture much venture capital around, overell spending, a larger percent there was a market opportunity for capitalists in the late 1960s. "There's certainly more of it than specific types of pure antibodies. Now these same companies are which have a potential for disease worried about losing key people from what some have termed "headhunting" by venture capitalists and by recent sturt-up companies. In some cases this has strained relationships between the old round of entrepreneurs and the venture capitalists.

Iotel, a semiconductor company, is suing former employees who broke away to form Seeq Inc.. charging them with stealing trade secrets. It is also suing the veoture capitalists that. Intel charged, "induced" the employees to leave. The awkwardness of the situation is illustrated by the fact that one of those venture concerns, - Kleiner, Perkins, Caufield and Byers II is owned to part by Gordon Moore, chairman of Intel, and William H. Davidow, senior vice president and director of corporate marketing.

Venture capitalists insist thet there is nothing wrong with re-cruiting people. "It's just like Exx-on deciding to hire someone from Mobil." said Craig Taylor of Asset Management, one of a group of venture companies that formed a new genetic engineering company. gy analyst for Eberstadt & Co. Certain fields might become overcrowded because of an influ of new companies.

 Prices being paid for a stake in a company are higher than ever, making it less likely that venture capitalists will earn the 5-10-1 or 10-10-1 return on their investment they characteristically expect.

As long as the market holds up for companies going public, how-ever, venture investing will remain a good business. "Somebody who overpaid e vear ago looks like a

New technology will wring more gasoline out of every wring more gasonic out of the same of crude while oil users turn arrel of crude while oil users turn the same to different fuels. "The genral trend toward conservetion has been consistently underrated," Mr. Copulos said.

Increased Drilling

At the same time, the current msurge in oil-well drilling will produce a "very sharp increase" in lomestic oil production, Mr. Coonlos said.

Successful domestie oil drilling n the first quarter of 1981 soared by 35 percent over last year's rate, incording to the American Petrole-im Institute, largely in developing known reserves. But there were 25 percent more wells in new territory han last year, and the total numper of oil and gas wells and dry noles is already at 15,614 — an in-nease of 18,7 percent over 1980

Mr. Kelly sees continued heavy conservation as key to an importree future. "There are a lot of diferent (energy source) combina-ions but it's certainly possible to et oil imports down to zero" by he year 2000, he said in an internew. The Reagan administration illed nearly all Department of En-rgy programs boosting conservaion, arguing that price alone is the est incentive. His scenario is based on continand storm windows, and new, energy-efficient furnaces, refrigerators and other large appliances when old ones wear out. These savings free natural gas for use in industry, displacing oil there, Kelly said. Cuts in electricity consumption reduce utilities' need for the oil burners they switch to during peak electricity demand periods. Automobiles could be getting 60 miles per gallon by 2000, and with a national average of 55 miles per gallon, 3 million harrels of oil would be saved a day, Mr. Kelly said. The major question mark here, according to Colleen Belli of General Motors Technical Center in Warren, Mich., is consumer de-

Federal regulations will require 1985 autos to get 27.5 mpg. but demand is well ahead of that," she said: GM cars will average 31 mpg by 1985 and 35 mpg in 1990. "Cer-tainly we can achieve 55 mpg, but we'd have to sell quite e few at the small end to get that everage." At Amoco, chief economist Ted Eck sees late 90s imports at around 2 million harrels daily, calling that "a comfortable number ause you can envision all of it coming from the Western hemi-sphere. We would no longer be strategically exposed." The idea of e 55 mile-per-gallon auto fleet by then is "categorically impossible, and 45 mpg is more reasonable, he

The biggest single factor will be business tax policy, Mr. Eck said, because 50 percent of U.S. energy is consumed by industries; businesses and cars and trucks in com-nercial service.

Major critics of the low-import ed energy-saving in old offices scenario include Exxon, which and homes: caulking, insulation forecasts a return by 1990 to the old peak of 8.8 million barrels a day and a decline to the end of the century to 4.7 million barrels, "depending on the level of synthetic liquid (fuel) production," a spokesman said.

Conservationists also doubt that zero imports can occur with zero federal help for energy savers, be-cause of continuing inflation. "Business as usual will eur imports only 35 percent," said Robert H. Williams of Princeton University's Center for Energy and Environ-mental Studies. "Only investments in energy efficiency will bring in-flation under control."

CREDIT LYONNA

1980 Financial Year

The second oil price shock, in 1980, produced a further worsening in the external accounts of the non-producer countries, a marked acceleration of inflation and a pronounced decline of industrial output in most countries. Nevertheless, contrasts between the monetary policies followed (action on interest rates in the United States, quantitative restrictions in Europe) brought about substantial movements on the foreign exchange markets.

Under these conditions, Crédit Lyonneis, despite a necessary and very marked increase in its provisions against risks, achieved - in large measure through the structure of interest rates - a notable improvement in profits.

In the face of constraints through credit ceilings in France,...

(thanks to allocations to surplus, to a State participating toan, and to issues of bonds) made possible, norwithstanding very tight credit ceilings, some increase in loans in Francs to customers (+ 7.1 % at end - 1980 by comparison with the end - 1979 figure). Furthermore, loans in foreign currencies were vigorously expanded, since these, at the end of the year, represented 9.5 % of total loane to customers, that is four percentage points more than at the end of

In France, the improvement of the Bank's working capital the previous year. Expressed in terms of average annual funds, loans to allocations to surplus, to a State participating toan, and granted to customers thus increased by altogether 14.1 %, as against 11.4 % for the previous year. Due to this fect it was possible almost to satisfy the priority needs of companies, at the cost, it is true of some decline in personal loans and in advances to individuals, and of a slowdown in the increase of the outstanding net total of home loans (+ 12%), which had expanded considerably in 1979.

...the expansion of international business....

Crédit Lyonnais, in 1980, confirmed its marked interest in international business, and its wish to participate in the increasing opening of the French economy to toreign markets. It further expanded the number of its branches abroad (openings in Cairo and Atlanta), and the activity of these on behall of customers: the amount of deposit funds collected advanced by 18.6% (as against 13.6% in 1979), and of loans by 68.1%, which thereby increased their share in total loans to the Bank's customers from 14.9% to 20.7%. Parallel with this development of transactions by its direct network, the other, highly diversified establishments which Credit Lyonnais owns abroad (banking or specialised subsidieries, essociated banks, representative offices), were very active.

...and strict management and improvement of the interest rate structure...

In terms of the strategy previously defined as regards productivity and dynamic marketing, special attention was paid, in 1980, to policies as regards: withe efficiency of operating structures: redeployment of faci-

ities of the Paris branches, and e drive for regionalisation in the computerisation: equipment, procedures and reorganisation leading to substantial increases in productivity: woverheads: strict control of investments and limitation of personnel costs, thanks to a slight reduction in the staff total for France; marketing: advertising campaigne and the selective promotion ol products and services. Moreover, the high level of interest rates prevailing in most countries in 1980 made it possible to obtain an increase in the yield on loans exceeding the correlated increase in the cost of deposit tunds, as a result of the fact that the most expensive among these were voluntarily tess sought after by the Bank than sight deposits which were in the main non-remunerated. This resulted in a slight improvement of the margin in transactions with customers, by 0.35. percentage points in France and 0.31 points abroad

...made possible a marked improvement in profits.

The simultaneous expansion of margins and the volume of transactions facilitated a use in nel banking income (30.6%); operating profits before depreciation and provisions, and after allowing for the limited increase in overheads (14.4%), advanced from Ft 1,515 million in 1979 to Ff 3,143 million in 1980. Notwithstanding operating provisions which were three times higher than those for the previous year (due to the increasing number of companies in difficulty), net profits were FI 476.4 million, a rise of 60.2% over the previous year's ligure.

On May 19, 1981, the shareholders' representative assembly approved the accounts and decided, at the proposal of the Board of Directors, to distribute a dividend of Ft 35 net per share. To this should be added tax already paid to the Treasury of Ft 7.50 (tax credit), making a total dividend of Ft 22.50 per share.

What are the first things that come to mind when seeking financial backing for a major project?

You need to be certain that the source of funding is secure. Equally important, you need a bank which can supply a total solution to your requirements—from the initial assessment of the viability of a project to its successful completion.

You need Creditanstalt—Austria's leading national and international bank, ranking well within the world's top 100. With group assets of US$18.3 billion, it has strength to spare.

For many years, Creditanstalt has been closely involved with the successful development of Austria's export-oriented economy, building up not only a fund of knowledge but also a strong team of specialists in the field of international project finance.

The fact that Creditanstalt is responsible for over 40% of Austria's export financing (and incidentally, for handling over 30% of imports), is proof that Creditanstalt's capabilities are recognised.

Creditanstalt has the solid background of expertise in project finance management that you need. We are well qualified to suggest and arrange the most appropriate type of financing, to appraise your cash flow situation and to monitor the progress of the project on the spot, wherever it may be. And we have the expertise to assess risks, to provide market information, to assist in negotiating contracts and to provide non-recourse financing > to meet your precise requirements. Why not talk to our specialists about your project? You'll find the greater the challenge, the readier our response.

THE BATTLE FOR PEACE By Ezer Weizman. 395 pp. Illustrated. $15.95. Bantam Books, 666 Fifth Avenue, New York 10019

Reviewed by Norman Corwin

DIPLOMACY has earned a bad reputation over the centuries. Its failures have been more costly than anything else in human history, considering the enormity of the wars that ensued. Even the process has been suspect. "I have discovered the art of deceiving diplomats," said the Italian statesman Cavour. "I speak the truth, and they never believe me." "Lying in state," quipped Oliver Herford, "Mentir et dementir," said a baron in the French foreign office. Lie and deny.

But there is a new kind of diplomacy on token display in former Israeli Defense Minister Ezer Weizman's graphic, utterly fascinating memoir of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty. The technique consists of placing cards face up on the green table. Nobody had to lie in the prolonged and precarious confrontations between Israeli and Egyptian negotiators. The truth was awful enough without complicating matters by lying.
Weizman came to his role as main pivot in those negotiations, through extraordinary qualifications: nephew of the first president of Israel; fighter pilot at 18; at 26, air force chief of operations; at 34, commander of the air force; at 43, mastermind of the epic air strike that knocked Egypt out of the Six-Day War; at 52, defense minister. But there was much more to him than a brilliant military record. He was articulate, hard-driving, principled, voluble, candid and, to judge from the sound and sight of him on television, highly charismatic. Obvi-ously these qualities won the trust of an equally forceful adversary across the table, Anwar Sadat.

The common bond between him and Sadat was their insistence on candor: "Sadat always surprised me by his habit of playing with open cards, he writes on Page 18, and 267 pages later says of himself. "I always laid my cards face up on the Cabinet table. I said it all, loudly, and not always in the most elegant language." Advised at one point to keep his mouth shut in a crisis, he found the warning "counterproductive — I opened my mouth wide — I've never found any difficulty doing that."

Weizman disarms the reader with his outspokenness as apparently he did Sadat and the Egyptian generals and ministers with whom he negotiated. This sometimes led to conflict. with fellow Cabinet members at bome, "I [sometimes] let my tongue run away with me. My temperament is as fiery as a furnace stoked up to a million degrees." He is frank about his prejudices and limitations: "Anyone who claims that his only aim in life is to serve his people is not telling the truth. Everyone has ambitions, and I am no exception. However, it is vital to find the appropriate balance between personal aspirations and the good of the country, and I have al-ways been aware of how delicate the balance is."

He is candid too, in his appraisals of the men with whom he dealt on both sides of the Suez. He had the highest marks for Egypt's minister of war, Mohammed el-Gamasy: "First class . . . my admiration grew by the minute . . . he spoke as an uncompromising patriot, but I believed in his sincerity; be appeared sensible and open-minded. If there are others like him in Egypt, there's hope of attaining peace. I thought."

Weizman and Sadat enjoyed mutual esteem and even affection. Though they traded hard, and were at times stubborn in their positions, they never became vexed with each other -something that could not be said about either man with respect to their own countrymen, "Ezer!" Sadat exclaimed at one point, "Pay attention! I'm talking big business!" This was in response to Weizman's having "come at him with a slingshot, proposing a direct telephone link between our Southern Command and HQ of his Third Army — and he bombarded me with his heaviest ammunition: exchange of ambassadors, total normalization, commercial relations and tourism. · But Weizman does not permit high regard to obscure the dark side of Sadat - his mercurial nature, his occasional inflexibility, and his capacity for throwing gravel into the peace ma-chinery, as he did by suddenly raising his price at the culminating Camp David conference — a maneuver that nearly wrecked the meeting and almost aborted what might have been the last chance for a peace treaty.

Menachem Begin does not come off nearly so well, although Weizman gives him due credit for large accomgives him due credit for large accom-plishments. Begin is depicted as "good at harboring guidees," as an embarrassing bore at times during talks with the Egyptians: "In address-ing others — including the manner of a teacher talking to his pupils... overbearing." Whereas Sadat wanted to take peace by storm, "Begin pre-ferred to creep toward it inch by inch. ferred to creep toward it inch by inch. He took the dream of peace and ground it down into the fine, dry powder of details, legal clauses and quotes from international law."

Weizman has high praise for Jimmy Carter's dedication to the success of the long drawn-out and fateful Camp David negotiations, but he does not spare criticism of what he considers Carter's shortcomings on the way to that result.

The lowest grade in Weizman's his-tory is given to Secretary General Kurt Waldheim of the United Nations, whom he dismisses as "hostile and chilly; he'd learned nothing and understood less." There is both irony and drama in the trajectory of Weizman's career, "a raging hawk" and redoutable foe of the Egyptians, to such respect for Sadat and Gamasy that he came under fire from his own government. "Some [Israeli] ministers related to me as if I were the Egyptian ambassador to Jerusalem. What makes this book extraordinary is not only the insight into all principal characters, especially Weizman himself, but a sense of witnessing the play-by-play of diplomatic ex-change, and the understanding afforded, in depth, of the harsh realities faced by both sides. And there are Weizman's asides to the reader, on such matters as the Decline of the West (nonsense, he says — the West can endure setbacks the Communists could never coutenance); on terrorism, and why it is a mistake ever to show conciliation or moderation show conclusion or moderation toward it; on Western misconceptions about Arab oil ("anybody who believes oil supplies can be guaranteed by means of pressure on Israel is fooling himself"); on the surprising conclusion that military men may be better at peaceful solutions to problems than their political counterparts. than their political counterparts. He quotes Gen. Gamasy as saying, early in the process, "The military inegotiators] must not reach a deadlock. We must help our political leaders solve the problems. We must find a way."

That way was ultimately found, and = :there is now peace between the two former enemies. One of the things ... that might help to keep that peace tle for Peace" in Jerusalem, Cairo and Washington. However, there is a paragraph midway in the book that makes :. one realize, with a shudder, why it was so painful for Israel to give up all that Sadat asked for, and why it is so hard for that beleaguered country to relax:

The Middle East is an unpredictable region. [There are risks in] granting unlimited credit to treaties and agreements. Leaders and regimes rise and fall; there are some whose first act on taking power is to renounce every commitment undertaken by their predecessors." Gen. Weizman has resigned from the government in Jerusalem. One hopes he will be around if needed.

an apparently simple contract.
Once South had opened one notrump, using a 15-17 range that is now popular in some quarters, North felt confident about game. When a Stayman inquiry revealed the spade fit North thought she might be missing a slam, and indeed the North-South cards would produce 12 tricks on a good day.

The bad trump split should not have put a 10-trick contract in jeopardy, for all the defense is extitled to score is the club ace and two trump tricks. A club was led to the ace and East shifted to the diamond jack South took the king and cashed the trump ace, discovering the bad news.

The simplest play at this point for South was to lead hearts, encouraging West to take one ruff. But instead

Washington Post Service
ARDMORE, Pa. — Tom Watson stood on the 18th tee at the Merion Golf Club Wednesday doing what he hates most: waiting.

Think of the Game

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — Having lost in-timate contact with haseball since the Giants and Dodgers were moved to California, I was baffled by the intricacies behind the baseball strike and sought out a scribe to clarify matters. I was referred to one Peregrine Pouter.

Q. I am told, Mr. Pouter, that you are a scribe. A. They told you wrong, pal. I am a sports reporter. There haven't been any scribes in the business since the Dodgers were shipped to L.A.

Q. I thought it

Baker was peculiar. Having a scribe named Peregrine, I mean. Did all the scribes have to change their names when they became sports

A. You got it, pal. Scribes had to be named Al, Jimmy, Pete, Sam, Larry, Lou and Len. My own scribe name was Bill. We gave up the fancy writing for fancy bylines. Q. Is it true that baseball is now played on a carpet?

A. Right, pal. Every day in every way baseball gets fancier and fancier. A few more years and they'll be playing it on Oriental rugs.

Q. Then baseball is getting richer and richer? A. Where you been all your life, pal? Don't you know the owners are facing bankruptcy?

Q. There's just no interest in baseball any more, I suppose.

A. You got to be off your nut, pal. Baseball has never been so popular. New attendance records come in every month. Sale of television rights is bringing in millions. You can't even buy a baseball team any more for less than 20 or 30 million bucks.

Q. Then why are the owners facing destitution?

A. Because they're paying the players these fantastic salaries, pal. Some are paying millions for players. They're being wiped out. That's the reason for the strike.

Q. You mean the players are so sore at the bosses for paying them millions that they refuse to play

A. Come on, pal, nobody's that dumb. It's not the players who are sore about getting the millions. It's the owners who are sore.

Q. Sounds to me like the owners who don't pay the big bucks ought to be sore at the owners who do, instead of getting sore at the players. Why don't the small-buck owners strike against the big-buck own-

A. Spoken like a true idiot, pal. If you knew anything about baseball, you'd know that the problem isn't with the owners; it's with the law. The law allows players to work for the boss offering them the biggest paycheck. You've got to expect the plungers to bid sky high when a fancy piece of talent comes on the market.

Q. Why isn't something done about that law? A. Exactly what the owners are trying 10 do, pal. It's the whole point of the strike.

Q. To make Congress change the law?

A. Look, pal, nobody can make a law that says you can't work for anybody you want to. That went out with slavery. All the owners want is for the players to get along together and agree that they won't accept their full rights in the mark-

Q. I wouldn't agree to that if I was a player. It would spoil my chances of getting as rich as Las Vegas crooners, investment bankers and TV performers. None of those birds give up their right to extract the maximum. Why should I? It sounds like slavery.

A. Not slavery, pal. Just a little

Ivo Pogorelich: Piano Fortissimo

Yugoslav, 22, Seeks to Give 'New Sound' to Chopin, Prokofier and Company

By Merida Welles

International Herald Tribune ONDON - "I'm not chang-L ing the norms. I am just introducing a new piano sound, which is unreachable for many artists," explained the 22-yearold Yugoslav pianist Ivo Pogorelich, whose controversial reputation preceded him to London. Although Pogorelich had already toured four countries and won piano competitions in Italy, Yugoslavia and Canada, these successes were forgotten in the wake of an uproar over his personal and musical style at the Chopin piano competition in Warsaw last October. Pogorelich made his debut at London's Royal Festival Hall on Tuesday, with the Philharmonia Orchestra under the direction of Seiji Ozawa. The capacity audience responded with gasps, ner-vousness, and agitated chatter in the intermission. Anticipation of this concert had been mounting even before the pianist's London recital debut two weeks ago.

One critic acclaimed his interpretation of Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 3 as "sparkling with invention and energy. fraught with danger, but every hurdle triumphantly overcome Another remarked on the limpid ease with which Pogorelich, who has a decidedly casual stage pres-ence, mastered the complicated

Martha Argerich, a former winner of the Chopin competition, who was originally to have performed the work in London, recommended Pogorelieb to Osawa when she fell ill, It was not the first time the high It was not the first time she had boosted his career: In the Warsaw competition, when Pogorelich was eliminsted in the third round, Argerich resigned from the fiercely divided jury in protest. In the re-sulting furor, 25 Polish music critics awarded the Yugoslav a special prize of their own.

In a recent interview, this enfant terrible, who, with his tall, sinewy figure, sculptured features and frenzied coiffure, resembles Rudolf Nureyev, dismissed verbal assaults on the leather pants and string tie he wore at the War-saw competition as irrelevant to music. (At the Festival Hall per-
